

It seems absurd that the federal government would even consider limiting the programming that is provided by either satellite radio broadcaster because the programming is available locally. Most of the music on satellite radio is available locally as well but this is not an issue? I think that this precedent has already been set by cable television stations such as the weather channel. This channel is able to provide local weather info so for what reason would satellite radio then be limited. Finally, I made the choice to purchase satellite radio service partially for the extensive programming, but also because I am willing to pay each month for programming that lacks commercials. I feel people should be able to choose where they would like to get information such as traffic and whether from. Limiting satellite radio programming would detrimental to the competitive force that drives our market economy.
